The following essays on the subject of the Presidency were originally published in the New York Commercial Advertiser. They have been collected, and are now dedicated to you, gentlemen, by the author, who respectfully requests for them a perusal. You are to hold your deliberations in the same city where the Declaration of Independence was made, and the constitution of the United States was formed. I am sure it is the desire of every Whig, that the same patriotism and wisdom may pervade your counsels, which were so conspicuous in the Congress of 76, and the convention of 1787. Under the constitution then framed, and subsequently ratified by the states of the Union, we and our fathers have enjoyed unnumbered blessings, and a nation has grown up which is, at this moment, the admiration of the civilized world. The union of the states has been the prolific source of our prosperity, security, and happiness, and the constitution is the bond of that union. All the embarrassments which have been experienced, and all the apprehensions for the republic which have been at any time felt among us, have arisen from violations of the letter and spirit of the original compact of union. A constitution is nothing but an agreement of the whole people with each other to abide by, and enforce, certain general principles and regulations, which are prescribed...
